

LAMILL COFFEE

About a hundred miles outside of Reno, there's a little truck stop just off I80 that claims to have The Best Coffee in the World. That's what the plaque says. Well, no disrespect to Sierra Sam's Truck Stop Casino, but that's a pretty tall claim. We at Lamill are very serious about our coffee—we liken it to fine wine. After all, coffee has notable vintages, is aged, has narrow growing parameters, and most importantly, has the depth and character of a fine wine. Why, just the other day we chanced upon an impertinent little Guatemalan that teased us with hints of chocolate, licorice, and ripe cherries. Told you—we're serious about coffee. When you walk out of here, you should have no doubt about who serves "The Best Coffee in the World."

Excerpt from Hacienda La Esmeralda: “Coffee quality is a product of altitude and processing. One of the truisms of coffee growers is that the bean is at its finest the moment the ripe cherry is picked from the tree. The only thing the grower can do from then on is to diminish the quality - he can in no way improve on it. This means that as growers our responsibility is to pick only the ripest most perfect fruits and process them as perfectly as possible to bring out the full taste that nature put into them.”

Hacienda La Esmeralda farm has consistently grown some of the most flavorful coffees year after year. Their Geisha variety of coffee, indigenous to Ethiopia and transplanted to Panama over 40 years ago, has been their success. Only in the best hands and in the perfect territory can this variety's potential be realized. Lamill has just 300 lbs of this limited and truly exceptional coffee. Characterized by heavy purple fruit and a complex deep syrupy body, but words cannot fully describe the concentrated, lush and sweet flavors.

Tasting notes: Sweet Meyer lemon, purple fruit, complex, deep syrupy body

The pickers were instructed to select only the best coffee available, avoiding over-ripe, immature green or defective cherries. LAMILL TEAS

For years, Tea has lived in the shadow of its more famous and arguably sexier younger sibling, Coffee. Tea has had to content itself with a slightly older crowd as Coffee snapped up the young hipsters, not to mention all the acclaim and limelight. Tea has been patiently biding its time, waiting for the day when once again, it would reclaim its glory. That day is not long off. People of all ages are discovering Tea's widely acknowledged health benefits. Of course, this isn't news to us—we've spent the last few years sourcing the best teas in the world. It was only a matter of time before people re-discovered the extraordinary tea leaf. All hail Tea!
